DIEDRO

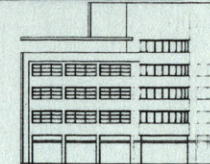

El proyecto de vivienda para la ciudad de Burgos, en España, se desarrolló en un terreno irregular y con una gran variedad de alturas. El objetivo era crear un conjunto de edificios que se integrara con el entorno urbano existente, respetando la escala y la tipología de las construcciones vecinas. La solución propuesta consistió en un edificio de planta en forma de diedro, que permitiera aprovechar al máximo el terreno y ofrecer diferentes niveles de privacidad y orientación a los habitantes.

El edificio se compone de tres bloques de viviendas, cada uno con su propia entrada y acceso a la plaza central. La planta en forma de diedro permite una distribución flexible de los espacios interiores, adaptándose a las necesidades de cada familia. Además, el diseño incorpora elementos de integración con el entorno, como la creación de una plaza pública que sirva como punto de encuentro y recreo para la comunidad.

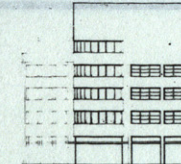

El proyecto fue desarrollado por el arquitecto español Juan José Sordo, quien buscó una solución que combinara la modernidad con la tradición local. El resultado es un edificio que no solo cumple con las exigencias funcionales y económicas, sino que también se convierte en un hito urbano por su forma única y su integración con el tejido urbano existente.
